Complications associated with a neck lift are few, but can include some mild asymmetry where there is a small residual pocket of fat on one side or other of the neck that needs to be addressed through a touch up procedure. If a small touch up is required, it is usually a simple liposuction of the affected area to address any asymmetry.

No facelift can keep the skin and soft-tissues of the face smooth forever. Most surgeons advise that after 5-10 years, you may need a secondary procedure to revise and renew your result. This obviously varies with the facelift technique used, the age at which you had the procedure performed, how well you care for your skin, and many other factors.
